Housing Credit	Reference		GENERAL COMMENT AS TOPIC IS NOT ADDRESSED IN QAP DOCUMENT:  Fairfield Housing Authority is preparing to submit a 4% Tax Credit application; however, the QAP does not include language regarding projects with scattered sites.  Many year ago, as HUD was developing public housing, many communities in Alabama made the decision to NOT concentrate public housing in a single area, but rather to deconcentrate and scatter housing on smaller sites across the Cities and Counties.  Fairfield Housing Authority, located in Fairfield, Alabama, has legacy projects that are in despeate need of rehabilitation; however, funding those rehand by bundling the projects together is the only way we can financially rehabilitate and then manage those sites.  These developments, as well as many other Rural Development projects, are fewer than 24 units per site. When combined, however, these totalover 200 units. These would be managed and operated as one project and financed under one ownership structure.  Our recommendation is that the Alabama Housing Finance bothallow and encourage scattered site developments that will leverage the tax exempt bonds and 4% tax credits.
